

As school starts online, in-person or hybrid, see what St. Louis area superintendents are paid

Hazelwood: Nettie Collins-Hart

Nettie Collins-Hart is paid $253,126 as the superintendent of the Hazelwood school district. Enrollment is 16,570 students.

The start of a new school year may never have posed more challenges than in 2020. Should students show up in classrooms, learn from home via Zoom and the internet or do some hybrid during this coronavirus pandemic? These are the decisions being made by school boards and superintendents across the St. Louis region. We dipped into our newly updated public salary databases to pull out information on how much these school leaders are making this year. Boys swimming prepares for inaugural season

“Getting swimmers has proven to be challenging as the students didn't get a chance to meet me in the spring, and they are starting during a pandemic,” Prenger said. During meets and practices, the team will take several precautions against the coronavirus. These precautions include one swimmer per lane, no sharing of equipment, wearing a mask when not swimming, temperature checks and screening questions.
