Marin County college-help nonprofit 10,000 Degrees promotes, adds Bay Area staff

Vanessa Bishop has been hired as chief program officer for San Rafael-based 10,000 Degrees, a nonprofit that says it helps more than 12,000 students and families in being successful in college.

Additionally, the group, serving seven Bay Area counties, announced Eileen Tsai has been named regional director South Bay and several staff members have received promotions.

Prior to joining 10,000 Degrees, Bishop founded My Forever Village, a nonprofit that supports young people who are transitioning out of foster care.

She also was entrepreneur at Entrepreneurship for All (EforAll); executive director, managing director and program director at Citizen Schools; program director intern at Math Power; teacher leader in the Hazelwood School District; and a teacher in the Jennings School District.

Bishop holds a Master of Arts degree in school leadership and development from the Harvard University Graduate School of Education, an educational specialist degree in educational leadership and administration from Walden University, a Master of Arts degree in teacher education and professional development from Lindenwood University, and a Bachelor of Arts degree in elementary education and teaching from the University of Missouri–Saint Louis.
